Concept note

Ubi societas ibi jus is a legal maxim which means 'where there is society, there is law'. It means the law and society are related to each other. The society becomes the jungle without the law and the law also needs to be changed according to the changes the society faces to keep pace with society. So, the maintenance of peace and harmony of a society will happen in its entirety only if there is a law for the society. The objective of having law is to secure justice for the society. However, John Rawls in his 'Theory of justice' also prescribes justice to be the first virtue of social institutions. Therefore, the concept of law and justice is sine qua non for the existence of peaceful and harmonized human society.

But, with the advent of globalization the countries across the world are interlinked which resulted in intensification of worldwide social relations linking distant localities in such a way that local happenings are shaped by events occurring many miles away and vice-versa. Therefore, globalisation has affected matters that are domestic or national and were made subject to bi- or multi- lateral cooperation in an institutionalized framework. The age old debate of law and justice is also becoming interrogative in the contemporary times with the advent of globalization.

There is no doubt that globalization is good for many reason like free trade, export and import of goods, access to services at low costs, exchange of cultural values, sharing of technology and many more .But, the fruits of globalization are not reaped equally by the developed and developing countries because of the socio-economic conditions prevailing in different countries. A lot of problems are still
